A Seat in the Stalls Come with me to Hollywood . . . . . by

Beverly Baxter, M.P.

BECAUSE of my visit to California, I can now boast that in filmland's capital I was in the company of famous men and women who would need police protection if they ever showed themselves in public in Toronto, Milwaukee or London. Come with me and meet them.

When I was being driven to Universal Studios a station car passed us quickly and was soon out of sight.

"That's Bob Montgomery," said the driver. "Guess he's late on the lot."

I hope you will agree that what I have described is of absorbing interest. How many readers can say that they have been passed on the road by Robert Montgomery—and in a station car?

Then there was the vivid scene inside the Universal Studios, where I lunched with the executives, while Douglas Fairbanks Junior sat at the next table but one. Unfortunately, we were back to back so I didn't see him.

LOVE BY A POOL

ONE actor whom I have always admired is William Powell and, therefore, it was pleasing to be taken on the set where we found him making love on the edge of a pool to a mermaid named Ann Blyth. The lovers, however, were certainly well chaperoned. The director sat about two yards away from them. Camera men, make-up men, story men, acoustics men, publicity men and electricians hovered around and above them like guardian-angels.

As I was under competent escort no one exhibited the least curiosity about my identity if any. So I moved up and had a look down Mr. Powell's throat. In fact I was so close I could have pushed him into the pool, but I hardly felt that our acquaintanceship had reached that point.

But how can I describe the special intimacy of my association with Mr. Freddie March? My guide took me into a shed where Mr. March was rehearsing a scene with another actor, while the director sat on a chair and looked at them. In fact the first requisite for a director is to learn to sit on a chair without falling asleep, or, if he does fall asleep, he must pretend that he is sunk deep in thought.

On this occasion there were no lights, cameras or microphones, just the five of us in a friendly little group. Except, of course, that my guide and myself never spoke, and the other three took no notice of us whatever. In fact the imperious ability of film actors is a fascinating study. I believe you could ride on a set astride a horse—and they would only think that you had strayed from some "Western," or that the script had been altered.

ALL SHADOWS

WHAT is the truth about Hollywood?

No one can deny its remarkable achievements nor begrudge to the pioneers the reward of their vision and energy. But I was glad to leave it. Somehow one feels that it is a world of shadows where nothing is real but the unreal. Human dignity is dwarfed, talent is gambled in like poker chips, sex is an occupation, authors become hacks, and actors are the slaves of the lamp, the lens and the microphone.

There is no normal life for the stars, despite their pleasant villas, swimming pools and tennis courts. They hear the pounding surf of world events with the faintness of cave dwellers. Their contact with each other is based upon the price which makes everybody and everything. Perhaps the film has done more than any other medium to destroy human loneliness, yet I

THEY FIGHT TO THE DEATH

FLASHING swords, galloping steeds and bold men battling to death highlight "The Swordsmen," Columbia's technicolor tale of the MacArden-Glowan clan feud. Above, Larry Parks and George Macready in a scene from the film, now showing at the King's.

WHY DEANNA'S MARRIAGE ENDED

BY PAULA WALLING

THE separation of Deanna Durbin and her husband, Felix Jackson, is just another case of a May and December romance failing, says her studio. Universal star Deanna is 28 and her husband 47.

The studio spokesman denied the report that the pair would divorce immediately (Jackson has already been divorced three times).

Deanna, who has a toddler daughter, Jessica, married Jackson in 1945. She divorced her first husband, young producer Vaughn Paul, in 1943, after two years of marriage.

CARMEN MIRANDA goes to London in April for a month's engagement at the Palladium. She is only one of several Hollywood stars engaged by that theatre. Others are Mickey Rooney and Danny Kaye.

Jeanette MacDonald is off on a three-month concert tour of the United States.

Sweden's Viveca Lindfors will star for Warner Bros. in "Autumn Crocus." This is an adaptation of the Dodie Smith play.

Marlene Dietrich, as soon as she completes Foreign Affairs for Paramount, returns to Paris to star in a film autobiography of the famed woman author, Colette.

FOR what it is worth: Garbo has practically decided to return to the screen this year in a romantic story of Paris and Vienna in the 19th Century.

JOHN BARRYMORE, Jun. 15, son of the late famed actor, plans to go on the stage.

His mother, actress Dolores Costello, told me this, and adds that she insists upon the boy finishing high school first. The Barrymores have been in the news for more unpleasant reasons. Helene Costello (sister to Dolores) lost the custody of their seven-year-old daughter to her estranged husband, Lee Leblane.

Veteran actor Maurice Costello (her father), and the family's long time friend, Lionel Barrymore, appeared in court to defend Helene, without success.

TREVOR HOWARD is not going to play in "The Passionate Friends" with Ann Todd after all. Shooting will start in England soon but as yet no leading man has been chosen in Howard's place.

Names mentioned for the part are Alec Guinness, who appeared as Herbert Pocket in "Great Expectations," and Michael Gough, who plays second lead in "Blanche Fury."

THEATRE Directory

MAJESTIC—Holiday in Mexico (Walter Pidgeon, Jose Iturbi, Jane Powell).

STAR—Nobody Lives Forever (John Garfield, Geraldine Fitzgerald).

doubt if there is more secret loneliness anywhere in the world than in Hollywood.

Admittedly I was there in a period of great anxiety. Not only has Great Britain closed her market to American films, but other countries are threatening to do the same. Faced with this heavy financial loss, the Big Producers feel that they cannot risk a box office failure, so they fall back on the formula which has proved successful in the past, and they take no risks with new stars, new stories or new technique.

SUPERLATIVES

THEY still announce that each fresh film is the most stupendous, sensational and unforgettable masterpiece since "Gone with the Wind," but they do not believe it. Neither do the critics nor the cinema public. Cinema attendance in the U.S.A. has dropped sharply in the last 12 months, and it is still falling. Yet the studios are afraid to offer anything new and daring.

It may be that this financial crisis which has hit Hollywood will bring a new strength and a new courage. Perhaps like a wind from the sea it will blow away much that is tawdry, cheap and false.

I wish Hollywood well, for it has been a great friend to us when our own studios could not put Britain's films to the world. But American films will not regain their place until a new vision and a new courage are born.

In fact, what a film Hollywood itself would make at this moment! I know a good many authors who would write the script for nothing.

LOWDOWN ON LEGS

By PATRICIA CLARY

Marlene Dietrich, who owns two of the world's loveliest legs, believes they got that way because her mother made her wear high shoes lacing half-way to her knees until she was 18.

Modern mothers, she said, are ruining their daughters' legs by letting them wear low-cut shoes without heels.

"Many girls in Germany used to wear high shoes until they were 12, but my mother made me wear them until I married," Miss Dietrich said. "I am convinced they were responsible for shaping my legs."

"The shoes girls wear these days make their ankles and feet, as well as their legs, completely shapeless. They all grow up to look like pianos."

Present-day women who do have beautiful legs, Miss Dietrich added, don't know how to display them.

Weak Ankles

"They should study their walk and their posture," she recommended. "I've noticed that many women let their toes point out. It's surprising how much it helps the legs to walk with the feet pointed straight ahead."

Miss Dietrich said her mother didn't prescribe the high shoes in any attempt to beautify her legs. "I had extremely weak ankles," she said. "My mother thought the shoes would strengthen them."

She took the shoes off when she was 16, and she still had weak ankles. So much for that.

Miss Dietrich is currently displaying her legs as a night club entertainer in Paramount's "A Foreign Affair." They are encased in silk stockings.

"There are many beautiful stockings made in America," she said. "I happen to prefer silk simply because nylon wrinkles around my knees."

She said the reason for that probably was that the world's best-known legs are topped off with old-fashioned round garters.

Girl-Perfect For Glamour

MAX FACTOR, who should know, has given his idea of the perfect glamour girl.

The Hollywood make-up expert says there isn't one yet, but if she does appear, she will have: Vera Zorina's torso; Lana Turner's legs; Garbo's nose; Susan Hayward's eyes; Ronald Russell's eye-brows and forehead.

Loretta Young's mouth. Irene Dunn's chin. Joan Crawford's cheekbones. Judy Garland's ears.

Maureen O'Hara's neck. Ronald Russell's hair, in its natural brunette shade.

Esther Williams' arms. Katherine Hepburn's hands. Lauren Bacall's voice.

And Rita Hayward's "genius for selecting clothes that do what every woman dreams her clothes should do for her."

Barts doctor finds a new smoke

TO reconcile a craving for cigarettes with the burden of the tobacco tax has been a most pressing personal problem for 54-year-old Dr. Geoffrey A. Harrison, chemical pathologist at St Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.1.

Now he has solved it—at least to satisfy himself. After hundreds of experiments he has found that a good smoking mixture can be made from the untaxed leaves of carrots and wild water-mint blended with the stuff of bulrushes.

"It tastes fine, is smooth to inhale, does not irritate the eyes, and is not objectionable to my wife—a non-smoker," he told me.

For the pipe smoker Dr. Harrison has devised a fragrant mixture of dried peach and willow leaves.

He began his experiments the day after Mr. Hugh Dalton announced his "Gasper" Budget last April.

First he tried the dried leaves of a rock-rose bush growing in his garden. "They tasted like Irish blinny," he writes in a report of his experiments published in the Chemical Products Journal.

by
CHAPMAN PINCHER

Then he made a "cane" by filling a pipe with dried leaves and pressing them in a vice. "I chain-smoked three pipefuls and got a bad pain in the stomach, so I did not try it neat again," he says.

Smoking the leaves of tomatoes and beetroot made him feel sick. Potato leaves gave him a headache.

The is Dr. Harrison's recipe for the cigarette mixture:—

Strip the carrot leaves of stalk matter, and spread them out on paper to dry. After two weeks' ailing them up. Then to every ten parts by bulk of carrot leaves, add one part of the dried leaves of water-mint (a plant common round ponds), and one part of bulrush fluff.

Without the fluff the mixture sparks like a bonfire.

A pinch of dried rhubarb leaf will counter any carrot taste.

"Do not use garden mint instead of wild water-mint—its smoke is nauseating," says Dr. Harrison. "And never try blending the mixture with tobacco. The result is awful."

After six months' trial Dr. Harrison now prefers his home-made mixture to tobacco. But there is one snag.

"It takes me an hour to roll 20 of these cigarettes and I need 50 a day. But is my spare time worth only 3s. 4d. an hour?"

"That is a question I still have to settle."

ONE OF OUR SHIPS IS MISSING

by SIDNEY RODIN

BRIEF messages appeared in the newspapers recently saying that the British ship Samkey (7,219 tons), an American-built Liberty vessel, owned by the Ministry of Transport, has not been heard from since she radioed that she was passing north of the Azores, in the stormy mid-Atlantic, on January 31.

The Samkey left the Royal Albert Dock on the morning of Saturday, January 24, bound for Cuba, where she was to load 7,000 tons of sugar—a week's ration for more than 31,000,000 people in Britain.

She should have reached Cuba on February 11.

We have read that on board were a crew of 43 Britons, and that hope has not yet been abandoned that they may all be safe.

We know that Portishead wireless station, near Bristol, has been calling constantly—to establish radio contact with the Samkey wherever she may be.

And we know that Portuguese planes from the Azores searched across the mighty wastes heaving and roaring for thousands of miles north and west of those islands.

FOR SUGAR

Immersed in the problems of our own living, we have little time, perhaps, to think much about the 43 men silent amid the storm of the ocean.

Nor of their families waiting news.

I talked to the people whose husbands and sons have gone to fetch that cargo of sugar so that life in Britain may go on.

David Hill, the donkeyman of the Samkey, is a 28-year-old cockney sailor, and cockneys, strange as you may think it are among the finest sailors afloat.

He kissed his wife and two young sons goodbye on the morning of January 24 at his pre-fab home in Cleverford, Canning Town, from which you could almost see the grey upper works of the black-hulled Samkey lying in the Royal Albert Dock less than two miles away.

He left in his "tidy suit," carrying woollen and thin underwear and dangerees in a small suitcase, for David Hill takes pride in his personal appearance.

Such a goodbye was nothing new for Mrs. Hill, or for any of the Hill family. David is one of six brothers who all left London's dockland, their birthplace, to follow the sea from boyhood.

SHE WAITS

David himself made a "pierhead jump" at the age of 16 to get signed on aboard his first ship, and has been torpedoed and shipwrecked in two wars.

Like his brothers he has always come back. There has always been news—except this time.

Mrs. Hill said to me quietly: "I listen to every B.B.C. news, I buy every evening paper. I get up at seven to fetch a morning paper from the newsagent although we have one delivered."

"I dread each knock at the door. I cannot sleep since the first message from the shipping company a few days ago saying 'anxiety' is felt."

"David was so cheerful, for this was to have been a short voyage and he said he was going to bring me some food home about March 15—5lb. of sugar, 5lb. of tea, 5lb. of butter, some tinned fruit and perhaps a bright shawl."

"Other men might go ashore to get drink, but David always goes to get 'stores' for us."

"The Samkey was short of a galley-boy, and he wanted our elder boy, Ivor, to take the job. But Ivor is 14, and now he's away on at school, so he couldn't go. I am so glad I do not want either boy to go to sea."

Donkeyman Hill gets £25 10s. 6d. a month for his part in sailing the Samkey.

At the other end of London, Mrs. Hill was working, as usual, in a jam factory.

A day or two before the ship sailed a wavy-haired, six-foot, hatless lad in blue macintosh and grey pin-stripe suit—"he was always a smart boy," left Mrs. Hill's home in Cobbold-road, Shepherd's Bush, W., to spend a little time with his sweetheart Joyce, before joining the Samkey as a deckhand.

THREW UP JOB

He was 20-year-old Dick Hildes, who although he rarely saw the sea as a child in London, threw up his job in a butcher's shop because he burned with sea fever, and so got aboard his first ship at 16.

Mrs. Hildes was in white overalls and heavy clogs when I met her. She turns sugar into syrup for the jam—the last sugar she was using came from Cuba.

She is a widow, and the £3 a week she earns is needed to help look after three other sons who live at home—Frank, 17, a tailor; Raymond, 15, a carpenter's apprentice; and 11-year-old Edward.

"I must keep working," this little London woman said, "if only to stop thinking about Dick. He never worries about storms, and he wouldn't like to think I was worrying."

"The sea is his life. His one ambition is to become an officer. Of course, I wish he had stayed on at the butcher's shop; but someone has got to do the job Dick is doing."

LEFT BEHIND

William Frank Ballard, aged 23, of Wensley-road, South Yardley, Birmingham, is a leading able seaman in the Samkey, in which he has served for two years.

He is the only member of his family ever to go to sea, and has served in the Merchant Service since he was 18.

His mother said: "Every morning I ring up the London office of the shipping company, but they can tell me nothing."

At a seamen's hostel I met Neil McNeill, a young A.B. from the Isle of Barra, Outer Hebrides. McNeill should have been in the Samkey, but overstay his leave with an aunt in Kendal.

McNeill was smiling, but not as you might have thought, just because he was on dry land. He was pool to join another ship bound for looking forward to going to Liverpool, New Zealand.

MANY people think of the Empire as a collection of wide open spaces, but the Rock of Gibraltar, where I called the other day, is so narrow that you can cross it on foot in a quarter of an hour.

It is the smallest, the nearest, and perhaps the oddest colony in the whole Empire. In area it is about twice the size of Hyde Park, and you can get from one end to the other in a bus for 4d.

There's no water except what they catch when it rains, there are no fields and no hedges, and the only cow in the colony died last August.

The cow belonged to the admiral in charge of the dockyard. He had a parrot once, but that's dead, too. Come to think of it, the Navy itself doesn't look any too strong in these parts now-days.

The frontier between Gibraltar and Spain is 1,300 yards long, which is less than a mile, yet Franco keeps 2,000 troops there to guard it. This works out at about one man to every two feet.

ESCAPE TO THE SUNSHINE . . . with BERNARD WICKSTEED

What a 4d. bus ride!

It is not quite so crowded on the Rock itself, but there are 27,355 people living in its 1 1/2 square miles, most of them in a compact area the size of an English village.

Before the war people were living six to a room. Then, when it looked as if Gibraltar might be besieged for the fifteenth time in its history 17,000 of the inhabitants were evacuated to Britain, Madeira, and Jamaica. About 2,700 of them are still in exile. The Government won't allow them back because there is nowhere for them to sleep.

New homes are being built, but they are taking just as long to materialise as in Britain. Five blocks of flats to house 300 families are planned. They will cost £2,000,000, and the first of them will not be ready for another year.

To help pay for all this the Government has organised a lottery. There are three draws every month and the top prize is £3,000. The alternative was the introduction of income tax, which Gibraltarians have so far escaped. They hope the system will continue, because buying a lottery ticket is more fun than filling in income-tax forms.

Gibraltar became British in 1704, when an admiral captured it as an afterthought. He had been sent to take Barcelona, and having failed he thought he'd better do something, so he took Gibraltar instead.

Men of Ice Age

THE first people who ever lived on the Rock were called Neanderthals. They inhabited the place during the Ice Age. The fossilised skull of one of them was found in a quarry 100 years ago, and the brain cavity was so small that scientists thought at first it belonged to an idiot.

Since then fossilised remains of similar people have been found in Germany, Czechoslovakia, Palestine, and Jersey. So even if they were idiots they got around a lot.

The modern Gibraltarians also like to get around, and for that purpose they have 1,100 privately owned motor-cars. As they can drive right round their pocket-size colony in a few minutes they do most of their motoring in Spain.

Just lately this activity has been cut down because it is illegal now to drive a car in Spain between midday on Saturday and eight o'clock on Monday morning.

If your car is more than 18 h.p. you aren't allowed to use it on Wednesdays either.

There is a law against tooting your horn in Gibraltar. If someone gets in your way you have to yell or bang on the side of the car.

IN A STORM?

Master mariners with whom I have spoken are very dubious. Some fear that the Samkey may have been caught on the edge of one of those whirlwind storms which occur in this area.

If that happened the Samkey might have been overwhelmed by mountainous waves.

Others are critical of the Ministry of Transport in sending the Samkey out in ballast. They failed to find a cargo for her.

A Liberty ship in ballast is said to be difficult to manage in heavy weather.

The Samtampa, a sister vessel, broke up with the loss of all 39 of her crew when she got out of control and was driven on Portiwahl rocks last April. She also was in ballast.

In recent years it has been extremely rare for a ship the size of the Samkey to disappear without a last warning message.

A PUZZLE

There has been criticism of the Liberty ships recently.

Experts on both sides of the Atlantic are trying to find out why 80 of them have lost their propellers at sea since mid-1946.

A representative of the American Bureau of Shipping said in London recently: "It is believed that a critical vibration occurs when the propeller blades are rotating at full power."

The Liberty ships were mass-produced in wartime for a war job, and they did that job admirably."

But following rudder failures about 500 of them have had their rudders replaced or reinforced.

Hope for the Samkey still persists, and Mr. Robert Cleland, of Kirkcaldy, Scotland, father of the fourth engineer on board, has offered £200 towards the cost of an air search because he is "desperate for news."

Could the crew of the Samkey, if she had broken up, have taken to their lifeboats and landed on one of a group of tiny uninhabited islands on her course?

Even that is possible.

But until the Atlantic yields her secret, until this new mystery of the sea is solved, all that officials in London can say is: "One of our ships is missing."

Even the Gibraltar apes have Army ration books

with your hand. You may not use headlights either, but to offset this no one seems to mind if you go in the wrong direction up a one-way street, providing you do it backwards.

The Rock is riddled with tunnels and storage chambers of different kinds. During the war a party of miners making a tunnel came across a cave with a lake in it 120 feet long. A man fell in some time ago and his body has never been found.

Ape legend

SIMILAR happenings have given rise to the story that there is a tunnel from Gibraltar to Africa. It would have to be some tunnel, because the Straits are nine miles across at their narrowest, and the water is 1,500 feet deep.

Legend says the famous Gibraltar apes, reached the Rock by this route, though how they did it without oxygen masks and flash-lamps nobody has explained. Nowadays reinforcements for the peack are brought from Africa by air.

These are the only apes at large in Europe, and they are all on the ration strength of the British Army. I spent an afternoon with Captain John Fitzgerald, who has the interesting title of "Officer in Charge of the Rock Apes." He got the job because he had once looked after some camels on the Northwest Frontier, and his C.O. said he was just the man to take charge of the apes on Gibraltar. You know how it is in the Army.

The apes get a ration allowance of 2 1/2 lb. 8d. per ape per annum. There's a story that a former officer in charge used to spend this money in the local pubs, and at closing time the apes came down from the Rock and carried him home.

Monkey nuts

CAPTAIN FITZGERALD is more business-like. He keeps an ape file and an ape account book. Once a quarter he indents for their ration money on Army Form N 1514, and his accounts (on Form SF 10) are audited by a major and two captains.

He feeds the animals on sweet potatoes, onions, nut (monkeys for the use of), oatmeal, and Army biscuits—which they are able to eat because of their exceptionally strong teeth.

The apes roam about the Rock all day, but report for themselves at 09.00 hours and 18.00 hours daily. At one time there were only five left, and the enemies of Britain who had spread the story that when the last ape left Gibraltar the British would go, too, began to rub their hands with glee. That was when Mr. Churchill sent his famous wartime signal that the ape strength was to be brought up to 24 and maintained at that until further notice. Under Captain Fitzgerald the number has been brought to 18, and if all goes well there will be 25 by the end of the breeding season this summer.

Here are a few more notes from this part of the Empire. The almond trees are now in blossom, butterflies come out on fine days all the year round, and there are centipedes six inches long.

The main street is called Main Street, postage is 1/2d., and local phones are free. At sunset they fire a gun which scares the life out of you and there is very little twilight.

The Rock

THE sediments from which the Rock of Gibraltar is formed were laid down 100,000,000 years ago. Since then there have been a number of ups and downs.

Just now the Rock is sinking, but it is likely to last another 100,000,000 years, by which time the evacuees still in Britain will have given up caring whether they ever get home or not.

If I were Home Secretary

by CLAUD MULLINS

THE Criminal Justice Bill of 1947 will make many useful improvements in our present methods for dealing with offenders. But it contains some serious defects and there is at least one grave omission.

Of the defects the most notable is that courts will have no power to pay for the medical treatment of those offenders who need it in order to be able to refrain from repeating their offences.

The Bill of 1938-9 proposed indirectly to give courts this right: Probation committees were to have power to pay the necessary fees when a court made a probation order containing a provision requiring the probationer to submit to mental treatment. "Mental" treatment was defined as "any treatment designed to cure or alleviate his mental condition."

Thus physicians and psychiatrists would have been able to combine their efforts, and both would have been paid from public funds.

SECONDLY, under the new health plan, mental treatment is likely to be given to offenders, mainly in mental hospitals.

As one who has sent for mental treatment at least as many offenders as anyone on the Bench, I am convinced that many of those willing to receive treatment will refuse to go to mental hospitals. There is a widespread dread of such hospitals—irrational, but very real.

Probation officers and I could persuade our people to go for treatment just because we could assure them that there was no question of insanity, which is something that the generality of people fear because they do not understand that mental trouble is no more disgraceful than measles or cancer.

At the South-western court in London we were able to persuade scores of people to seek psychiatric treatment because we could offer the services of (1) an individual doctor, trained in psychiatry, who saw them in his ordinary surgery, or (2) the Institute for the Scientific Treatment of Delinquency, a nonofficial body that can draw on the services of many expert doctors.

If the new Bill passes without giving power to pay for treatment, courts will no longer be able to use the services of individual doctors. Only State mental hospitals are likely to be available and I fear that offenders will refuse to go there.

Such a devastating blow will be struck at psychiatric treatment of offenders while they remain at work and at liberty.

THE omission in the Bill is any power to compel all courts to adjourn cases after guilt has been established in order that full inquiries, police, social, and where necessary, medical, can be made before a sentence is given. (Clause 23 of the Bill gives some courts the power to adjourn after conviction and before sentence, but the fact that all metropolitan magistrates, and some others, have been doing this for many years indicates that courts have long possessed these powers.)

But why stop at giving power to adjourn? Why not insist upon it in all courts?

The reason why the Home Office is so timid about this is that it involves the Judges. Many Assizes are only held at long intervals and last only for a day or less and, therefore, cases cannot easily be adjourned.

The Home Office runs to earth as soon as any reform affects Judges, so timid.

But Judges are reasonable men and would accept reforms if Parliament were convinced of the necessity.

So eminent a Judge as Lord Wright has proposed the amalgamation of the smaller Assizes. There is much opinion in the legal world to support such a reform, though I admit that it is in a minority. But if the Home Office always waits for judicial unanimity, the only reforms that we shall get will be petty ones.

THE provision of time for full inquiry after verdict is, I would say, the biggest reform needed by our system of criminal justice. Without it Justice must in countless cases be blind.

Without it courts like the Old Bailey and London Sessions will have in their calendars men with over 20 previous convictions.

A few of these hardened criminals may have been incurable from the beginning. But most could have been put on the right road if, after their early convictions, full inquiries had been made and sentences passed with full knowledge, with medical treatment for those shown to need it.

If from this year onwards all our criminal courts could be obliged by law to adjourn cases for full inquiries, the powers proposed by the Bill to pass heavy sentences on persistent offenders could be made temporary only. In 20 years there should be very few of them.

So if I were Home Secretary I would tell my advisers not to be so timid.

Two-way neckline

Here is another "new look" neckline — the dual-purpose blouse. Made of washable crepe, and patented by a Bond-street firm, the day version shows a yoked blouse trimmed with a velvet ribbon.

With the yoke now taken out, the blouse reappears as a low-necked evening model.

STILLMAN'S
Freckle Cream

WILL CLARIFY YOUR SKIN

All of these "easy come" freckles can be "easy go" with the right persuasion. Simply use Stillman's Freckle Cream regularly each night after cleansing, leaving it on the skin all night to do its work while you sleep.

Not only will Stillman's Freckle Cream fade freckles, it will also give the skin a fresh, youthful, translucent appearance.

After the freckles disappear you will notice how much clearer, fresher, and smoother your skin becomes. Try Stillman's Freckle Cream today.

THE B.B.C. recently gave its select audience of television viewers a programme which, I suspect, would have been "wrapped up" a bit more for the listening-only wave-lengths.

The title was disconcertingly direct: "Sex Appeal in Clothes." The subject under examination: how women have used clothes to make themselves alluring to men.

The performers: twenty girls in authentic costumes dating from 1450 to now.

And the man who told everything — James Laver.

Mr Laver is definite about his dates. He marks "Sex Appeal in Clothes" from the year 1400. Until then, it seems, clothes had merely covered the woman. After 1400, women discovered that if they used sensations with enterprise the results were surprising. They have been experimenting ever since.

A deep-cut "decolletage" is only one of the weapons. There are four more "zones" on which women concentrate for getting their men.

For example: If you wear an eye veil, a hat veil, a mask, a patch, or a fan, it is obvious to Mr Laver that you are concentrating on Zone No. 2 — the Face.

Supporters of Zone 3 (Hip Appeal) favour bustles, crinolines, panniers, hip pads. Around 1830 women tried out Zone No. 4 (Leg Appeal) by wearing dresses 11 inches from the ground. And right from the Middle Ages to the present day they have been relying on Zone 5 (Foot Appeal) — cramming their feet into shoes that are too tight, too short, and too high-heeled.

What has The Professor to say of present fashion? A modern two-piece bathing dress (shown here as the televiewers saw it represents, he says, "maximum revealment."

At the other end of the scale Mr Laver produced a Turkish woman's national costume indicating "maximum concealment," a reasonable claim because only her eyes were showing.

I checked myself after the show. I'm a Number 2 and Number 4 — because I was wearing a hat veil and black silk stockings.

Eye-Catching Print

ONCE women of fashion stepped into print only in warm weather. But times have changed. Now, every season's success, prints are smart investment that yield their value, appear regularly in the well-planned wardrobe. You'll see flamboyant patterns sobered up by dark fur; pretty, refined little scrolls emboldened by coats of high colour. You'll see red and white zigzag stripes restrained by a little black patent belt; you'll see ravishing florals, staid grey with merry little figures.

Above, see a stunning tropical print afternoon dress on luscious Ann Rutherford, who is in "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," co-starring Danny Kaye with Virginia Mayo. Warm-hued and provocative, it has short sleeves, a tiny waist, flared skirt and a low, triangular neckline that's a perfect frame for jewels.

This year, more than ever before, plan to be in the fashion forefront with print accessories, too. Shock a black outfit with screaming gloves. Dazzle a quiet green with lively yellow blends; season a bland beige with ginger brown and pepper black. Achieve elegance by wearing a rich paisley bag with your black or brown fur coat. Let glamour go to your head with the latest version of the old-fashioned print poke. Create a stir around the neck of an understated navy ensemble with a dramatic silk scarf.

Keep Cool And Beautiful In Summer Heat . . .

FIRST real hot days of the week brought the usual summer beauty problem: How to look cool and look well-groomed in sweltering weather.

A face red and perspiring, hair lank and lifeless, curling wetly around the temples and neck, can spoil the effect of the prettiest dress.

First move in your keep-cool campaign is to push your hair out of the way.

If you wear a long bob, do it the upsway way for the summer.

If your hair is curly, have it cut to two-inch lengths all over your head.

You'll be surprised how much cooler it is.

Best treatment for your skin during summer is lots of cleansing.

At least three times a day, if possible, remove all your make-up either with soap and water or cleansing lotion.

Finish with a light application of skin tonic.

By the way, a leading cosmetic firm has brought out a make-up purse which is invaluable to office workers in summer.

No bigger than a small money-purse, it contains a bottle of cleansing lotion and a bottle of foundation lotion.

This means that no girl has any excuse for not keeping her skin scrupulously clean and her make-up perfect.

The lighter the make-up in summer, the better.

Use less and apply it more frequently.

Do not use the greasy foundation creams.

Avoid very hot or very cold baths. Tepid water is the best. After the bath pat yourself dry; don't rub.

Finish with a dusting of talcum powder.

If your feet swell in summer, bathe them with cold water two or three times a day.

Sit with your feet up on a wooden chair and cover your ankles with a cloth soaked in cold water.

Soak the cloth again every few minutes for about a quarter of an hour.

LOOSE CLOTHES Summer clothes should be loose. Coolest fabrics, strangely enough, are the silky ones, not those with a linen-like finish.

Coloured or black dresses absorb more of the sun's heat than white.

Avoid heavy costume jewellery. It makes you look and feel hotter.

Never use heavy, exotic scents on a warm day. The fresh smell of a good baby powder is much more attractive.

Newest New Look —

FORGET THE HEMLINE — IT'S ABOVE THE WAIST WHERE THE NEWS IS NOW!

WITH all the arguments focused for so long on the hemline, the tendency has been to ignore what goes on above the waist of a dress. In fact, a main point from the Paris dress shows (now completing their month-long display to buyers and reporters) is that this time it's not the hemline but the superstructure that gets all the attention.

What you might call the Newest New Look retains the long skirt and substitutes trimmings for severity. For example: —

Collars, and cuffs of striped or mottled silk; gilets and edgings of white plaid; white muslin ruffles and caneleles; checked taffeta used for skirts and matching ruffle petticoat; large bows of plain or spotted taffeta worn at the necks of suits; jackets lined with the same material as the shirt; man's starched wing collar worn on a navy dress; candy stripe collars and gloves; shoulder-width Cromwell collars made of white linen; spotted or striped silk revers matched to a hat in the same material.

POSTSCRIPT

"SCAFFOLDING" for this Newest New Look will be marketed in British shops in two weeks' time. A scheme has been launched to persuade women that, as well as pulling in their waistline, they should increase their bust measurement (as the Victorian women did) by means of false busts. Buyers from London stores who yesterday saw these new "aids to a fashionable structure" for the first time booked large orders at 10s. 6d pair (coupon free).

SEFTON DELMER comes back with another EXCLUSIVE

I get inside the Madrid H.Q. of the SS Escape Route

BECAUSE OF HIS mastery of European languages—no can, for instance, imitate the German accent when speaking French or Spanish—Sefton Delmer is able to talk his way into places closed to most reporters. Last week in Spain this language faculty enabled him to uncover a Nazi network smuggling Germans from Allied justice...

THE Nazi escape organisation for smuggling S.S. men to Spain and from there to South America is working at full pressure.

I know because a few days ago I managed to get into the headquarters of the Madrid branch of the organisation and see and hear for myself.

I had a talk there with the woman head of it, Clarita Stauffer, a German by birth. At the end of the war she was given special permission by the German Ambassador to become a Spaniard so that she might carry on this postwar work.

Officially the Madrid office is part of the Auxilio Social de la Falange Espanola (Social Assistance—Organisation of the Spanish Fascist Party), and the building at No. 14, Gallego Street, displays the red and black shield of the Fascist organisation. But inside it is all German.

A young, fair-haired man was just going into the building when I arrived.

I addressed him in my heaviest and most Berlin-sounding Spanish: "En que piso vive la Senorita Stauffer?"

He smiled at me. "Sind sie Deutscher?" he asked in German.

I grinned back: "Na und ob!" I said—which is the German slang equivalent of "What a question" or "You're asking me!"

He laughed happily and led me up the dingy stairs to a third-floor flat telling me on the way that Fraulein Stauffer was ill, and would probably not be able to see me.

"Well," I said, "I hope she can, because I very much want to see her. I have just come from Germany."

Which was true enough. I had been in Germany the week before visiting the civil internment camps, picking up there what I could about the escape organisation.

Getting In

THE young man was impressed. And so was Herr Vost, an elderly, rather shrivelled-looking man in spectacles, who told me that he was Clarita's secretary.

He led me into his office, which was littered with lists of German prisoners who had escaped across the Pyrenees.

"Fraulein Stauffer," he said, "is ill because she works so terribly hard. She's always on the go, travelling around, seeing people, getting the men out of the Spanish prisons and out of the internment camps, getting them jobs, and getting them out of the country. It's very difficult," he sighed. "Fortunately we have many good friends in important places."

"How many men are you looking after at the moment?" I asked.

"More than 800, and then there are the refugees, who have come from Germany to Spain—like yourself. They all come to us. What is it you particularly want to see Fraulein Stauffer about?"

I brought out a visiting card introducing me as the Chief European Reporter of the Daily Express.

It was a bit of a shock for him. But in the end I managed to convince him that the senorita really ought to see me.

And then Herr Vost led me through the dining room—dark, heavy, and German-looking—to the room where Clarita Stauffer lay in bed under a black oak crucifix.

The meeting

HER face—with its fanatical blue eyes, auburn hair, parted in the middle, heavy-lidded, energetic chin—was of the kind I always find it difficult to give an age. She might as well be in her late twenties as in her early forties. She looks the typical woman heroine of a patriotic underground (and don't forget that this is precisely what we would call her if she were helping British escapees on the run from the Nazis instead of Nazis on the run from the Allies).

She had an attack of pleurisy, she told me. But that did not keep the telephone bell at her bedside from ringing as we talked.

Main points of what she told me are—

1 The Spanish authorities, among whom she has many friends, help her. They welcome her aid in weeding out Communists from among the prisoners who escape from Spain.

2 This fits in with what I had heard about her organisation—that it helps only escapees who can prove that they are good Nazis.

3 That she had been able to find jobs for many of the escapees in Spain.

4 That the majority of the escapees from France wanted to get back to Germany. But there was a substantial number, all the same, who for one reason and another wanted to emigrate to South America. She had been helping to get them there by her special means.

This again fits in with my information that the Stauffer organisation works in close collaboration with the Buenos Aires branch of the escape organisation, which is also headed by a woman—Clissy von Schiller, wife of the former German air attaché in Madrid.

THERE ARE two main routes the escapees follow. The first is the Monastery Route to Rome and thence by air to Madrid. Second: With forged papers in D.P. trains to Genoa and thence by the air route to Barcelona.

4 Funds, she said, came from German and Spanish friends in Spain.

5 She denied that any escapees came to Spain from Germany. And when I told her of what Herr Vost had said about the refugees, she declared snappishly that Herr Vost was mistaken. She made it clear that she would not discuss the subject.

I knew...

THIS was a pity because I wanted to ask her about a Herr Rohrbach whom I had met only a few hours before. Herr Rohrbach had passed through the Stauffer organisation. In fact, he gave Gallero 14 as his Madrid address. And Rohrbach is a Nazi who had escaped from Smolensk in Soviet Russia, had made his way through Czechoslovakia to Italy. Here the German escape organisation had got him a Red Cross passport for refugees, a Spanish visa, and an air ticket for Madrid, where he was told to report to Clarita Stauffer. Now he was anxious to go to South America. He already had a visa from the Consul of the Dominican Republic, to work there as a rancher.

This Rome route with its Red Cross passports is the latest channel used by the Nazi escape line to friendly Spain and thence to South America.

To reach Rome, they use the "Monastery Route," being sent from monastery to monastery in Germany, Austria, and Italy until they get to their jumping-off point in Rome.

It is to my mind among the first three in Europe today. Herr Vost's bills are in accordance.

That, however, does not worry the guests, most of them wealthy Nazis. There are many in Madrid. Like E. B. Bernard, Franco's German arms salesman, who during the war headed the German purchasing commission in Spain. He has vast funds left and vast good will from Spaniards he has bribed.

No, Clarita Stauffer need fear no lack of money or official support.

Nearly Free Of Mines —Except Three Black Spots

BY BERNARD DREW

BRITAIN'S coastline is nearly mine-free again. By summer, holidaymakers should be able to wander around the coast at will for the first time since 1939, except for three black spots.

German prisoners who took over mine clearance from British sappers have freed some 20 areas. Of the 2,000 minefields sown with 350,000 mines nine remain.

These include the black spots, chief of which is at Mundesley (Norfolk), now officially "a permanently fenced area."

Here 1,000 land mines have become lost in a three-mile-long ledge, through the cliff being washed into the sea.

Experts cannot find a way to recover these mines. So with two small areas at Folkestone and Hastings (where hundreds of tons of refuse were tipped on to a minefield), Mundesley has been banned from public use for a lifetime.

Three of the last six minefields now being cleared are in Dorset—at Worbarrow, Kimmeridge, and Swanage Bay, where the action of the water is washing the mines out to sea.

IN THE DUNES

Biggest area is at Saunton Sands, near Barnstaple (Devon), where 50 mines are embedded in sand dunes. To get at them, water is being pumped three miles from a stream into high pressure water jets mounted on armoured tractors. The sand is washed away, and the mines detonated.

The other fields are on the Yorkshire coast, six miles south of Filey, and at Mablethorpe (Lincs). In each place there are only about half a dozen mines to be got out.

The "Mines all clear" signal is expected to flash to the War Office before the end of May.

At Weybourne (Norfolk)—the heaviest minefields were laid in East Anglia—where 4,000 mines have just been cleared from a four-mile stretch of beach, 14 armoured bulldozers were blown up during the work.

Some mines were located 20ft. under sand drifts.

PLANS WERE LOST

The last mine stronghold to go in Scotland was near Rattray Point. "One of our main difficulties has been to locate minefields exactly," an officer told me.

"Many were laid in a hurry at the height of the invasion scare. Then units went overseas and plans were lost."

Freedom of the beaches has not been cheaply won. British casualty roll to date is: Killed, 10 officers, 120 other ranks; wounded, nine officers, 37 other ranks. One German, too, lost his life. Described as "the keenest man on the job," he ignored his British N.C.O.'s warning, returned to check a spot—and stepped on a mine.

Minesweeping in home waters is also entering its final phase.

When the 32nd Minesweeping Flotilla puts out from Sheerness on April 1 to clear 200 square miles of shallows in the Thames Estuary, it will be the last operation of its kind in British coastal waters.

All moored minefields in the North Sea have been swept clear.

LIVE 12 YEARS

But the menace to shipping lanes may last till 1958—or even longer. It has been found that the life of German magnetic mines dropped from planes may be 12 years.

In addition, thousands of mines broke away from their moorings in the North Sea and East Atlantic.

How many are drifting today is anybody's guess. But scarcely a day passes without radio warnings of drifting mines being sent to shipping.

When British sweepers went to clear one moored minefield, only one mine was found where 200 had been laid.

Britain sowed some 200,000 moored mines in the North Sea and Western Approaches, Germany 120,000.

Up to the present, 7,000 have been cleared. The majority, corroded and weighed down by marine growth, have gone to the sea bed.

1,000 STILL THERE

Enemy planes dropped 12,000 magnetic and acoustic mines in home waters. The Admiralty has swept 6,543. More than 1,000 may still lie in Thames Estuary shallows.

A naval officer told me: "Danger from acoustic mines is passed. But with the magnetic mine we have found that the batteries, on which the effectiveness of the mine depends, may last eight to 12 years, not three as was first thought."

It was a magnetic mine dropped by Nazi aircraft in the Admiralty wharf, 1943, which blew up the ocean-going tug Orinoco off Brighton (Essex), in January with all 10 hands.

Stamp Collecting Is Soviet Big Business

BY ROBERT D. GRAFF

Stamp collecting in most countries may be an innocent hobby but so far as Soviet Russia is concerned it is a grim international business involving national honour and lots of money.

Selling Russian stamps to foreign collectors is a big business for Socialist Russia. Collectors who want the bright coloured stamps put out since 1917 must be ready to pay through the nose for them. They also must put up dollars on the line or black market equivalents for dollars in soft money countries like France.

The Russian government has a monopoly on stamp sales to collectors both inside the country and out. Inside Russia a special government stores provide philatelists with full sets of the latest Lenin commemorative issues. For example, in other countries of Europe and in the New World it is the local Soviet Purchasing Commission that handles the job.

For the Russians, selling stamps outside the U.S.S.R. is a sure-fire way to get needed foreign currencies. Russian stamp catalogues even now continue their prewar practice of quoting prices in terms of the American dollar. Anti-American feeling in the Kremlin these days has not changed business considerations.

If a collector wants a series of, say, four stamps with a face value of five roubles, he will have to pay twice or three times that much in dollars or the black market equivalent in pounds, francs, or lire.

This monopolistic price control by purchasing commissions has bred a big black market in Russian stamps. Philatelic dealers in Bulgaria, Rumania, Finland and other countries bordering the U.S.S.R. have bought up thousands of stamps at bargain prices. So have visiting diplomats and travellers.

The dealers or the diplomats sell the stamps to Western European or American experts, who in turn advertise the latest series for sale to collectors. But as a collector, you pay even for that back-alley route.

Stamp dealers in Paris say it is Russia's "commercial" approach to stamp issues that makes them expensive. The dealers claim the Soviet Government prints stamps not for letters but for collectors. For example, dealers say, there have been 12 separate commemorative issues for Lenin in the past 30 years.

BY THE WAY by 'Beachcomber'

I HAVE been deeply moved by an account of an Englishman who played marbles in the gutter with some Turkish children in Chanak (where Cecil Rhodes was born).

The account was headed "Friendship Through Marbles," because "an old Turkish Customs official" who watched the game approached and said (through a mid of tears, I will warrant), "It is a pity that more nations do not play marbles."

It used to be cricket that was going to lead on the rosy dawn of international world brotherhood, but a row between the Siberian Wanderers and the Trieste C.C. caused disillusionment.

Cicero knew it

TRUE trouble with the world is that you will never persuade any Government, of whatever complexion, to take marbles seriously. In fact, any movement towards universal peace through marbles is utterly impossible, since only Government officials would be allowed to fly about the world to the various conferences, whereas it is the ordinary non-official people or what cowed and bedraggled remnant of them is left, who should do the travelling.

"In marmoribus tranquillitas," says Cicero in Book II. of the De Maribus, and the words are as true today as when they were written in that villa at Tusculum.

Interlude

Prednose: It might interest you to know that Cecil Rhodes was born at Bishop's Stortford.

Myself: You are confusing the founder of Rhodesia with the Cecil Rhodes who founded the island of Rhodes. The latter was born at Chanak.

Ho yes

RESPECTFUL Sir,

We Persians have liked to tell you that our relationship with the circus of Wugwell is of only a friendship one, please, ho yes, and our call in Wretch Manor was of only a friendship one, as well, not was it of business matter. Truth is that we did there play see-saw on a shelve of books, but we was homa-tours and for fun not money, and to give pleasure to the warrior and his lady. We are not of the 12 dwarf men, who to us was lowclass bondits from gutters.

We are, ho yes, The Filthistan Trio.

GOVERNOR'S CUP TOMORROW

Interesting League Matches Today

The second match in the Governor's Cup series is the chief feature of this weekend's local football fixtures. It takes place at Caroline Hill tomorrow afternoon.

This afternoon there is an almost full programme of first division matches, one of the most interesting being the meeting of the Buffs and Sing Tao at Sookunpoo.

The Governor's Cup is completed second weekend of November. St. Joseph's and Inniskillings played a 3-3 draw on November 8; that game was also at Sookunpoo. The Buffs lost to Sing Tao 4-2 on the Club ground on the same day. That was the Buffs' debut in local first division soccer (they took over the 'Devons' fixtures at that time) and they showed good promise, making Sing Tao go the full distance to gain their victory. Both the Buffs and the Inniskillings, however, will field much changed teams from those which played four months ago.

The same will be true, of course, of both the Airmen and the Sailors at Causeway Bay. When Kitchener beat the RAF by three goals to nil in November, they were a much more formidable side than now. The RAF will certainly give them a good game today; they may even beat them.

BALANCED FA XI

Many changes are expected in the Chinese XI for this match (at the time of writing it is not to hand). The FA team, on the other hand, does not make many changes from that which took place in the previous match. Leck (still a doubtful starter) is first choice as goalkeeper; the introduction of B. Gosano at right back will do much to strengthen the team. The half back line is particularly sound, all three players having shown good form in recent representative matches. Forrow did not play in the previous match. If nothing else there is plenty of speed and plenty of latent shooting ability in the attack. Sewell, at centre forward, is well set with two strong wingmen on his flanks.

The FA's chosen XI is: Leck (Club); Gosano (St. Joseph's), Souter (R.A.F.); Anderson (R.A.F.), Forrow (Club); Parvin (Navy); Mavie (St. Joseph's), Weller (Club), Sewell (R.A.F.), Kierman (Inniskillings) and Bates (R.A.).

If the Chinese XI is the best possible, tomorrow's match should prove a most interesting struggle with the odds very slightly favouring the FA.

LEAGUE MATCHES

Today there are six first division matches. Good form is expected at all the four main grounds. The Buffs' match with Sing Tao, preceded at it is by another very attractive fixture, St. Joseph's v. Inniskillings, will draw the biggest crowd of the day.

A lot of service men, however, will go to the Navy Ground at Causeway Bay where the R.A.F. meet Kitchener in the first match (starting at three o'clock), and the Navy do battle with the Police in the second game.

All these league matches today are counterparts to those played in the

Football Team Of The Year

(By JOHN SHIPTON)

Manchester United have rightly earned the lavish praise bestowed on them by Britain's leading football writers. For a team to go through 17 matches without defeat is a remarkable achievement in these highly competitive days. In this amazing spell their victims have included Charlton, at home and away, Burnley, 1947 cup finalists, by five goals to none, Aston Villa, at Villa Park, by six goals to four after leading five-one at half time, Portsmouth at home and away 3-2 and 3-1 and Chelsea at Stamford Bridge by 4-0.

The Manchester men, too, are playing the type of soccer which has been described as "classical," a view with which I must agree after seeing them in action against League Leaders, Arsenal, and against Liverpool at Goodison. The good folk of Liverpool were truly amazed. There was no defence against a three-goals-in-six-minutes spell. Everywhere they go ground records are being broken. There was an attendance of 74,721 (receipts of £8,810) at Goodison Park, 81,000 at Maine Road, Manchester, for the Arsenal match, and average gates at home and away of more than 50,000.

Manchester United's Cup performances are all the more amazing when it is remembered that so far they have not played one of their matches at home. The famous Old Trafford enclosure was badly blitzed during the war and they have been guests of their neighbours at Maine Road. As Manchester City, however, have required their ground for their own home cup ties, the United have been forced to seek accommodation elsewhere, hence the match at Goodison and a Huddersfield venue for their fifth round tie with Charlton Athletic, although they were drawn at "home."

It is just shows what local talent can do. It is proudly boasted that the Reds can field a first class team of local boys.

The Local Lads

The "Team of the Year" has seven such players on duty regularly. They are Jack Crompton (goalkeeper), Johnny Aston (left half back), John Anderson (right half back), Henry Cockburn (left half back), Stanley Pearson (inside left), Johnny Morris (inside right), and Charlie Mitten (outside left). Crompton, a shipping clerk, graduated from Manchester junior football, and joined the team in 1944, played his first professional game in war time football. Aston, a Marine commando, another junior discoverer, was tried up as an emergency full back last season, and has kept his place since. Anderson, son of a former Rugby League player, was a Salford schoolboy star, and after making a brilliant debut, has also kept his place. Cockburn, who cost his team nothing when signed from a work team, is again in international form. Although only 5ft. 6ins. in height and weighs only 9st, he is a deadly tackler and a fine constructive player. Johnny Morris, only 23, is thought to be a certainty for international honours. He is from Radcliffe, near Bolton. He was also developed as a junior. Fast, elusive, and completely unselfish on the field, he has scored 20 goals so far. Pearson is a Salford schoolboy international, who has an unbroken record of 73 consecutive appearances. Mitten, who was born in Rangoon, once acted as the team's office boy at the age of 14. He is a brilliant schemer and was in international form against Liverpool.

The other four members of the team are "Gentleman Johnny" Carey, right full back and captain who was signed for only £250 in 1936. He has been honoured by Ireland, and the Rest of Europe, speaks three languages, and has played in almost every position. Alberry Chilton, centre half back, first spotted as a youngster in the north-east before the war, has proved an able successor to George Vase, and has missed only one game in the last two seasons. Jimmy Delaney, outside right, United's only Arsenal outside right, was formerly with Glasgow Celtic. He has been capped for Scotland both at centre forward and on the wing. Jack Rowley, centre forward, is a product of the Wolves nursery, and was signed from Burnmouth as an outside left in 1937. He is one of the strongest shots in football and with Morris leads the list of goal scorers in the first division.

The Busby Stamp

There then, is the Team of the Year—a team in every sense of the word, for it is their understanding and cohesion which has baffled their opponents. Average age of this "wonder team" is only 26 and cost not more than £8,000. Now the transfer value of the eleven players mentioned is well over £1,000,000. They have been watched by more than a million and a quarter people in 28 home, away, and cup games. Incidentally, they owe a great deal of their success to their manager, Matt Busby, the Scottish international, said by that grand player Jimmy Seed to be "the most accomplished wing half I can recall." There is United do these days, and it is his long-term policy which has made such a grand combination. As Alf Clarke, of the Manchester Evening Chronicle, who has followed Manchester United for more than 20 years, says: "United gained a priceless gem when Matt put his signature to the contract to become manager."

Arthur Peall says:

STROKE selection in snooker is a useful snooker player will pick pink off spot, as diagram. "You break he needs cue ball in line with last red, near side cushion. This can be done by cue ball in line with last red, near side cushion, back or by running through the pink and then the red. The billiard leaves at spot end of diagram. The red then, would not do not play too hard. Correct shot is a simple, in off red from hand."

All Way From US For Soccer Game

One hundred and Twenty Scottish Americans—the Macdonalds, Macdougals and Mackeys of Broadway, Brooklyn, and "Middle West"—will make a mass descent on Glasgow in April to see Scotland versus England at football on Hampden Park ground. These visitors have seats reserved for them. They will all fly across the Atlantic arriving on the Thursday before the match and returning the following Wednesday. They are determined to give the "Hampden Roar" an American accent.

KEEN CONTEST FOR CHAMPIONSHIP CONTINUES

The three-squad fight for the Women's League championship continues. Tomorrow, rivals Wahoos and Madcap Aces clash in the feature game of a full schedule.

The Merry Madcaps claim to the runners-up position in the senior loop amongst the men is practically assured. What little hope to be champions will disappear if they lose to VRC in what appears to be the best of the week's lifts. Eddie Marques Madcappers went down the last time the two sides faced each other.

The results of last week's fracas encounters have not changed the standing. The Mighty St. Joseph's remain in the lead with a hard-fought victory over the Canadians, while the Philippines, allied with "new life," played heads-up ball, but as the breaks of the game would have it, they were edged out by the slim margin of one run by the Madcaps. Charging further forward were Doc Molthen's fighting Wildcatters who avenged two previous defeats by taking the Aces to town with a 3-2 nose-out. The Felices are powerfully on the way to Champlainville after tough breaks early in the season.

Big Bill Woo's Canucks played the Saints to a standstill in the first three frames. They had bases loaded; there was some brilliant fielding too. However, temperamental Maple Leafers failed to co-ordinate in the attack. The result was they managed to score but one run for a slim lead at the end of the period. And that tally was not through any combination but a mighty swipe over the fence for a round-tripper. Bill Woo did it again—this was his second time clearing the wires.

That one-run Canuck lead did not last long. In the very next inning, the Saints registered three runs, which incidentally ended all the scoring of the game. And, incidentally, the "clan" of Ramon Castro, Dave Leonard and brother Stan between them did the hitting and scored the runs as well.

JUST MADE IT

The Madcaps just made it against the playing-mad Philippines. The fight was ding-dong for the full duration. It was an exciting game. The issue was in doubt until the last inning, although it ended tamely—in favour of the winners of course. Smoke got into the eyes of Filipino first baseman Al Smirke. A straight peg to him was dropped. It was one of those things that happens now and then. But the winning run came through for the other side.

Both sides were hitting the pill, the Madcappers banging out nine hits against Joe Franco's pitching, the Philippines hit Kelly Silva-Netto for six. Long blows were connected by Filipinos Thompson and Al Smirke.

and Rene Sequelra of Madcaps. Thompson's was the longest, a three-bagger, while two-baggers were slashed out by Al and Rene. Sheridan Hamet did some good batting for the victors with two one-base hits.

THEY STARRER ALONE

Virtually single-handed, slugging Thelma Watson gave the Wildcatters their first run. In very nearly the same manner speedy Margie Xavier gave the Madcaps the initial counter. A sizzling shot cut through the opposition as a result of Thelma's swing and saw her at the first sack. The second cushion was robbed. Pass bulls did the rest for her and she arrived home.

Express Margie Xavier's feat came as she got to first on a free ticket. In a wink she stole second and the third bag was lost as pretty quickly. A courageous slide, say Margie scoring, when a pitch was not caught entirely.

Early in the game the fighters from the Wild Cat hide-out pushed forward to a 3-1 lead. The two other runs were tallied by the Cats in the second frame. Cat Chieftain Thelma Watson hit a safety and a fielder tied herself, into knots, resulting in Cynthia romping around the bases and scoring. Angel Lima garnered the other run as she was pushed home by Rosie Oliveira's safely.

Fighting back every subsequent stanza, the losers reduced the lead when Celly Gutierrez scored as a result of Grl Gaan's smashing double.

Dolly Brown did it once again. Nine Madcappers were fanned. Even big-time hitters, Melvise Soares and Celly Gutierrez, went without a hit against Dolly's good hurling.

YOUNG GIRL IS SACRIFICED

When Mahloia Lerotholi heard that the South African Government intended to dismiss him from his post as chief of a lonely mountain village in Basutoland he consulted his witch doctor.

After a lot of dancing and talking, the witch doctor recommended a medicine unknown even in the long and varied pharmacopoeia of Africa. The ingredients included herbs and liquids, and portions of a young girl's body.

There was more dancing, then the villagers seized nine-year-old Malefu Guda while she was tending goats.

They took her to a hut where after more mystic rites, pieces were cut from her living body.

Then she was flung over a high cliff.

The medicine worked for a while—Mahloia remained chief for another few weeks.

Then police took him, the witch doctor, and 10 of the villagers and hanged them.

12-YEAR MYSTERY OF MR. LLOYD

His £85,000 home is now research centre

By GORDON CORNER

MR. LLOYD
Just before his disappearance.

A NEW YORK police re-open one of their greatest unsolved mysteries, the disappearance of British oil magnate Frederick Lloyd, in 1936, preparations were being made today to take over as a research centre his old house, Walton Oaks, Walton-on-the-Hill, Surrey.

It was the mysterious theft of keys and papers, some of them relating to Walton Oaks, from a New York lawyer's office, not far from the spot where Mr Lloyd disappeared, that has revived police interest.

The fact that the thief overlooked other valuables and selected only vital deeds and keys fitting Mr Lloyd's luggage, still in a New York hotel, has started a full-scale CID investigation there.

And it has given rise to a theory that the former owner of Walton Oaks and president of the £500,000 Petroleum Conversion Company may still be alive.

Inquiries today reveal that a City assurance company advanced to Mr Lloyd a sum of money on the security of the Walton Oaks estate, which was once offered to the Duke of Windsor when Prince of Wales.

The company, as mortgagee, applied to the courts to appoint a firm of estate agents as receivers some time after Mr Lloyd's death had been legally presumed in 1944.

The receivers sold the hall to Vitamins, Ltd., for an undisclosed sum.

Between the price paid and the sum advanced by the mortgagees there is a balance understood to total some thousands.

This surplus money, together with another mile of the hall's costly furniture, will form a large part of Mr Lloyd's British estate.

The beneficiaries are understood to be four nieces in the United States who are already in touch with a West End firm of lawyers.

Soon there will be application before the Probate Court for letters of administration both for the wife of Mr Lloyd and of his wife Genevieve who in 1945 died after years as a recluse in a New York hotel, believing almost to the end that her husband would return.

'DESCENDANT OF KINGS'

When Mrs Lloyd visited England in 1937, she said: "I know in my heart that he is still alive."

These words are re-echoed today by Mr W. Watts, of Eyot-gardens, Hammersmith, formerly chauffeur and confidant of Mr Lloyd and one of a rapidly diminishing group of people in England who knew him well.

"I feel now that he might still be alive, or at least that some light can be shed on his disappearance," he said today.

"He would be 75 if he returned. He was devoted to his wife, and one of the most delightful men you could ever meet."

To Mr Watts Mr Lloyd would confide some of the secrets of his early life, which, like his disappearance, was "wrapped in mystery."

Mr Lloyd claimed that he was the direct descendant of Welsh kings. He said that he was taken to America as a baby from England. At nine he was doing odd jobs for money.

When he was 14 he ran away from home and later married the girl who watched him climb to fame until his disappearance.

£85,000 HOME

There followed trips to England, where he had offices in Bush House, Aldwych, visits to the 300-acre Walton Oaks with a staff of 20 servants and refitted with brick facing in the early 30's.

Mr Watts says that Mr Lloyd paid about £65,000 for the estate, and £20,000 on furnishings and alterations.

There were rounds on the local golf course, where he was a popular member, and visits to the lonely Isle of Grain.

There came the night of October 26, 1936, when Mr Lloyd walked out

The whales were scrappy

PERTH.—Two whale-chasers have reached Australia from the Antarctic damaged by encounters with frenzied sperm whales. The Norwegian chaser Thorbrann limped into Freemantle today to replace a damaged propeller. Skipper H. Larsen said a whale in its death throes charged the 400-ton chaser, smashing a propeller blade with its head. Larsen said other fleets operating in his region included English, Dutch, Japanese and Russian. The Norwegian-manned chaser Terge II, operating with the British factory ship Balaena, reached Melbourne for a rush replacement of a damaged propeller caused by a harpooned sperm whale which killed itself in a wild crash into the stern of the chaser.

FIRST CREMATION
Singapore.—At the wish of his relatives, the body of D. Nichol of 10 Seaford Gardens, Aberdeen, Scotland, was cremated at the Hindu cemetery in Ipoh, North Malaya. This is the first time a European has been cremated in the history of Malaya.

Aged 52, Mr Nichol was a businessman. He came out to Malaya on December 29 and died after a short illness.

AFTER-THOUGHT
Cape Town.—Lying dying after drinking ant poison, Phyllis Johnstone, aged 29, said: "If I had known it would take so long to kill me I would not have taken it."

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Unusual lighting, plus a well-chosen point of view, provides a dramatic effect in this winter skiing shot.

FOR DRAMATIC EFFECT

IF YOU'RE looking for dramatic pictorial effects you've no need to go any farther. Here is a truly dramatic shot, made by an expert photographer, yet made with so simple a technique that even a novice can duplicate it.

In the final analysis, a snapshot such as this is interesting because of its lighting. It is this that provides the deep shadow effect, the dark sky, and the "halo" outlining the gloves atop the ski poles in the foreground. The sun, if you have not already guessed it, is behind the gloves.

Normally, when shooting into the sun, it's necessary to use a lens hood or otherwise shield the lens from the glare. Here the gloves serve the same purpose. For the camera position is such that the shadow of the gloves falls on the lens. In effect, a straight line might be drawn from the lens to the sun, passing through the gloves.

With the lens in shadow, all that remains is to make a normal exposure. An exposure of 1/200 at f/11 would be suitable for a shot such as this on most black and white film. Underexposure, rather than overexposure, is preferable for such a shot.

While lighting, to be sure, "makes" this shot, it does not depend on tricks alone. Its composition is good; the curve of the snow, piled in a drift along the peak, makes an interesting line; the ski poles in the foreground lend a feeling of depth; the figure at the crest's edge serves to balance them.

It is well to note these things. For good pictures won't come by tricks alone. Subject matter, composition, tone—all play a part in picture making. A dramatic effect of this sort can make a good picture better, yes; but the wise snapshotter never makes the mistake of counting on tricks to save a picture that otherwise would be poor.

Russian Royal Jewels Held In Pawn By Eire

As pawn broker to the Soviet Union since 1920, tiny Ireland still holds a trove of Romanoff jewels worth an estimated 40 times the amount for which it was pawned.

HIS DOGS ARE PAID A SALARY

When the Moslem Nawab of Junagadh, in Western India, fled his state and sought refuge in Pakistan from invading Indian Union army forces, he left behind on his country estate 1,500 thoroughbred dogs.

The two Dakotas at his disposal were hardly roomy enough to transport his 30 wives, £250,000 worth of jewellery and the carefully preserved and documented love letters from his harem, treasured over the past 30 years.

Dozens of small-time Hindu Maharajas from the principalities surrounding Junagadh have now divided this canine loot among themselves. One baron, a princeling, finding no pickings in Junagadh itself, which his Highness had divested of everything valuable when he fled, consoled himself with bearing off 300 of the valuable animals.

Lifetime Hobby
The Nawab had spent a lifetime collecting dogs, some from all over Europe, and arranging their nuptials, on each of which he spent thousands of rupees.

Whenever a pet dog and pet bitch were "married" the Nawab forced his sullen people to join in the celebrations.

Each of the animals was allotted a monthly salary of £10, although the highest salary of a government official, excluding Cabinet Ministers, was not more than £13.

The Nawab's Hindu subjects, more than 80 percent of the population of his state, are agitating for his deposition.

Sardar Patel, Minister of States in the Indian Government, favours his return under a democratic plebiscite.

Discovery: Robot eye is on Mars

by CHAPMAN PINCHER

In February with the planet Mars nearer than it will be for two years, astronomers, using a new robot eye—the electron multiplier—examined its surface. By coupling a powerful telescope, scientists examined the Martian "canals."

MOST astronomers agree that between the poles of Mars—which are capped with a thin layer of snow—are vast areas of brick-red deserts. A greenish belt which may be moorland or the decaying remains of primeval forests runs round the equator. There are no seas and no mountain ranges. The atmosphere is thin. The extremes of temperature are severe.

SCIENTISTS of the British Interplanetary Society believe that within 50 years it may be possible to visit Mars by space-ship and return safely. Equipped with pressure suits and carrying a supply of oxygen, explorers would be able to move about the surface of the planet. Because Mars weighs only one-tenth as much as the earth its gravitational pull is weaker. Men would be able to carry super-heavy weights and jump record heights. Animal life is probably extinct.

BOOK TO READ

Can hatred drive men to this?

KINGSBLOOD ROYAL,
by Sinclair Lewis,
(Cape, 5s. 6d.)

TODAY British bookshops and libraries release this simple story of suburban people. It begins, artfully enough, by making you smile, perhaps a little enviously, at the well-appointed domesticity of a Happy Young American Married Couple. It ends with that sensation—beloved of our grannies—of having somebody walking over your grave.

WHY? Because this is an epic tragedy of our times played out pitilessly, relentlessly, amid sleek abundance and sleek sanitation. Because it is a fierce tract about race-hatred, the most sinister force in the world. This is the greatest of the 18 books of Sinclair Lewis, creator of Babbalanza.

Here is a personable red-headed Negro, Kingsblood, a "coloured" man, an assured career at the bank, a charming wife with the highest connections amid the commercial aristocracy of their Mid-Western city, and the sweetest—too sweet for me—little daughter.

But then...the needle head of this tragedy is a whiff of Nell's father. The old man, wonders if they have royal blood, and the son undertakes a search of the family tree. The search shows the pedigree to contain a full-blooded Negro. He is so far back that our promising bank executive is only "one-thirty-second coloured."

Rupert's Silver Trumpet—25

The tiny corporal thinks for a moment. Then he acts quickly. "The worst part of this mistake is that it has left Santa Claus's castle without any guards," he says. "I'll put that right at once." Turning, he gives a couple of sharp orders and all the toy soldiers form up in single file. Then they turn to the left and, to the amazement of Rupert and Algy, they march straight off the ridge and disappear up a sunbeam, leaving their corporal behind.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

Attlee should meet the doctors now

An important statement on the Health Act deadlock... contributed by

LORD HORDER

I EXPECTED that 80 percent of the doctors would disapprove of the Government's National Health Act as it now stands. The proportion is higher than that—nearly 90 percent on the over-all figure. The basic question was directed to approval or disapproval of the Act as it now stands. That indicates willingness to approve an amended Act.

The present impasse could have been avoided, but for Mr. Aneurin Bevan's intransigence. The lengths to which he took this attitude could be judged by his speech during the Commons debate. Doctors who had not met him might previously have wondered whether the Negotiating Committee had failed in their job.

Any such doubts must have been settled by this exhibition of his stubbornness, mixed with offensiveness. I think that his speech undoubtedly influenced the result of the plebiscite. A great section of the public must also have wondered why the Government held this debate at all, unless they had some doubt about whether the Act is in the public interest.

POINTS IN DISPUTE

CLEARLY the impasse must be resolved, and means contrived to adjust the differences between the medical profession and Mr. Bevan—differences, which, regarded individually, should not create any difficulty.

The importance attached to the points in dispute by the profession really relates to the fact that Mr. Bevan's refusal to give way on any of them makes it clear that the ultimate intention of the present Government is to nationalise medicine.

Once this intention was revealed, doctors have understandably refused to yield on those points, such as the sale of practices, which protect them from becoming Civil Servants.

When Mr. Bevan agreed to meet the Negotiating Committee of the BMA after the Act had been passed, he knew that this Committee was only empowered to represent the public and that amending legislation was not excluded from the discussion.

On the very first clause which the Negotiating Committee thought might be amended, Mr. Bevan declared that he could not amend the Act. Parliament had spoken.

Parliament had expressed the will of the people. He could not undertake to alter the Act. So the Negotiating Committee lost confidence in Mr. Bevan, because he had gone back on the understanding which enabled negotiations to be reopened.

How can this impasse be resolved? It is very clear that the profession can get no farther with Mr. Bevan.

There is no point in bringing Mr. Bevan and the Negotiating Committee together again.

Nor is there any reason for changing the Negotiating Committee which has been appointed by the profession. The majority of the committee consist of general practitioners.

Doctors who are chiefly affected by the scheme; consultants, medical officers of health and representatives of the Women's Medical Federation are also included. The Committee has the complete confidence of the profession.

Mr. Bevan has deplored "the fact that the best elements in the profession have been thrust on one side by the medical politicians who are seeking to fish in troubled waters."

But the Negotiating Committee of the BMA dare not take any step for which the profession has given no mandate.

The BMA is a very democratic body. Every member of the Council is elected by the representative body. It is certainly a representative of the public and of the House of Commons of the people as a whole.

And the BMA constitutes the only piece of machinery available to the profession for expressing its views and negotiating with the Minister. I may say that I am not a member of the BMA Council myself. I have been elected to the Negotiating Committee as a representative of Marylebone.

ATTLEE'S TURN

NOW the Negotiating Committee is still in being. The other party to the discussion can and should be changed.

Why should the Prime Minister not act in the place of Mr. Bevan?

And if not the Prime Minister, then a small body of impartial persons who possess the confidence of the public and are experienced in matters requiring negotiation might be formed by the Government.

But the profession needs a much stronger assurance that it is not the intention of the Government to make the doctor a Civil Servant. If the Government gave way on some of the points at issue, that would give the assurance which is required.

For they would thereby rule out the possibility of nationalising medicine.

McKENNEY ON BRIDGE

Six Clubs Makes, But 3 N. T. Is Off

By WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY

SOME of the most exciting rubber bridge games in the country are those at the New York Bridge Whist Club, according to Life Master Harry Feinberg, formerly of Cleveland and now in charge of the club's card room. Harry says they take their bridge very seriously, and the cards go right along with them to make it a serious game.

Today's hand came up in a duplicate game recently held at the club. At several tables South made three no trump. At one table four no trump was made, at another three no trump went down one. Six spades was made and six spades also was defeated. At one table Prof. Ernest Zerner arrived at six clubs with the bidding shown, and that was the only contract on this hand that could not be defeated.

♠ 5	♥ 3	♦ 10 5 4	♣ 10 5 4

Following is the play used by Mrs. Sylvester Gintell to defeat three no trump. Declarer won the opening heart lead with the ace and laid down the ace of spades. West played the deuce, dummy the three and Mrs. Gintell (East) played the eight-spot. Declarer reasoned that if the spade break was a bad one, he would find the deuce in the West hand, so he cashed his other high spade and went down to defeat.

Six spades also was defeated with nice play. Declarer won the opening heart lead and ruffed a heart in dummy, then took two rounds of trumps and led a club. If West had made the mistake of cashing the ace, there would have been nothing to the hand. However, he refused the first club and won the second. East was careful to play first the eight and then the deuce, showing "down and out" so all West had to do was to lead the third club and give his partner a ruff.

25. Not fully grown, but sufficient to knock-out the little man.

IN the Skeleton Crossword the black squares and clue numbers, as well as the words, are left for the solver to fill in. Four black squares and four clue numbers have been inserted to give you a start.

The black squares form a symmetrical pattern in which the two sides of the puzzle balance each other and the top half corresponds with the bottom half. You can, therefore, fill in 12 more black squares to correspond with those given.

Since there is an 11 Across as well as a 11 Down, the centre square in the third line down and its corresponding one in the third line from the bottom should be blacked in.

The solution to 12 Down, since the clue is an anagram, must be a word of seven letters, as also must the corresponding one in the 12 Across.

"In this way, although I could not persuade them to billet their soldiers together in a few houses instead of spreading them throughout all the houses of the village (this was a great burden to the villagers), I did persuade them to move out of the church and to permit me to give services. "Always, there were four or five official secretaries at my services taking down everything I said. If, afterwards, they were doubtful about any of my words, they would call me in and I would have to promise that I would never say anything doubtful again. "Little by little, the authorities began to trust me and I was given passes to move about the countryside. The Communists are sometimes quite reasonable if you always said 'yes.'"

"Other of the fathers were not so fortunate. My dear friend, Father Augustinus Starr of Santa Barbara, California, was riding his bicycle along a road between his missions one day and a Communist stopped him and demanded that he give it to him. It was Augustinus's only method of travelling between his missions. He said 'no.' His bicycle was taken away from him and he was jailed and tortured. Although later released, he was jailed three or four times again for no reason."

"On the first of January, 1947, shortly after the Nationalists had recaptured our district, Communist guerrillas attacked his house and killed him, together with his friend, Father Benedict Brown, a Communist was snatched 39 times."

PATTERN OF ACTION
As Father Brandy began to be allowed to move from village to village on his mission rounds, he observed the pattern of action which the Communists used to occupy a village.

"When the troops arrive in a village, they immediately invite the people to protest against anyone they feel is a traitor to the cause. The accused are then brought before the assembled villagers and while a Communist soldier reads out the charge, agitators and villagers cry out against the accused. The Communist judge, usually an armed officer, then turns to the accused and says: 'You see—I am very sorry—but you heard the will of the people. You must die.' The accused is then given to the mob, who murder him in any way they see fit."

This system was used especially when dealing with Japanese puppet officials. In 1940, Father Brandy witnessed a massacre of this type when he passed through a village recently captured by the Communists, and formerly run by cruel Japanese puppets. The crowd cried against the puppet officials and 60 or 70 of them were handed over to the crowd."

AN OLD CHINESE CUSTOM
The crowd then cut the eyes of the puppets, slit them up the belly, and finally cut out their hearts. After the hearts had been cut into small pieces, they were divided among the people and eaten, as is the old Chinese custom.

"The same treatment is given to the capitalists, or rich villagers. The Communists accuse almost all large landowners of being Japanese collaborators and on this pretext, condemn them to death. "The rich, who are fortunate enough to escape execution, are forced to beg for a living. All their lands are confiscated, their money and all their belongings. To eat, they must beg from the rest of the village, who are not allowed to give them more food at one time than is sufficient for one meal. In this way, the Reds succeed in eliminating the upper classes almost constantly."

"For the remaining villagers, three mow of land is given to each person, who must in turn hand over a proportion of his yearly harvest to Communist officials for the support of the army. "If after each villager is granted his allotment, there is any superfluous land, this is made into common ground."

COMMUNISTS' FEARS

"A missionary is granted no land, neither for himself nor for the orphans or the aged who are cared for by the mission. I had money sent to me secretly or I should never have been able to do anything. "The Communists are afraid that the missionaries will gain popularity if they run hospitals, or give aid to orphans and the needy. For this reason, they do everything to eradicate mission hospitals, and homes."

"In one village, I was told by a minor Communist agitator that I must leave the Communist territory. I told him that I could not leave my work. That night, I decided not to go home but to spend the night in the church. A mob of over a hundred demonstrated in front of the church and began to beat down the church doors. I escaped through a side window and in an unexpected moment appeared in back of the church. I shouted to them that they were being led by an opium smoker, who used their money to buy his opium. Since they knew he was an opium addict, this angered them and they turned against their leader and later higher officials expelled him from the town. It was just my good fortune that I was aware of his opium habits or I should have been killed."

"If you give up everything you have and will agree to anything they ask, it is possible to get along with the Communists in the parts of China which they have not yet fully organised."

WELL DISCIPLINED

"Where they are firmly established, it is impossible to exist at all. Keeping a close check on your funds, they demand to know where you get your money. If you answer 'from the people,' they reply, 'Very sorry, does not belong to you.' If you reply 'from my country,' they reply 'Very sorry, you are spy of your country, you must go.' They are always very sorry if you are not executed before you leave the country, you are sent to prison for three months. In order that you will not be familiar with the current military situation. Then you are dropped on the nearest Nationalist border."

Luckily, we were always in a comparatively disorganised zone. "The Chinese Communist Soldier is very well disciplined. He lives strictly according to the Communist code and must confess any mistakes to a high-ranking officer. In September 1946, the Nationalists recaptured the territory in central Kiangsu and Father Brandy was liberated. Exhausted, he was sent to a hospital in Shanghai along with the five other priests who lived through the Communist regime. During the past year, Father Brandy has set up a home for boy war orphans in Shaoyang, Hunan. He has taught his 60 boys to farm their own fruit and vegetable gardens, to tan tiger skins shot in the neighbouring hills, and to make small handicrafts from bamboo. Working in co-operation with UNRRA, he and his fellow missionaries at Shaoyang, sent foodstuffs, thousands of axes, hammers and ploughs, seeds, fertilisers and dairy cattle to the poor farmers in Hunan Province."

PALESTINE FACES HUNGER

Lake Success, Mar. 12. —The United Nations Palestine Commission, in a new note to the British Government, warned tonight that if shipments of food were not settled within a week, a "serious gap" would occur in Palestine's food supplies after May 15, when Britain surrenders the mandate.

The memorandum again requested the British Government to authorise the Palestine authorities to begin buying food on the Commission's behalf through the Palestine trading account.

The Commission added that if Britain accepts the proposal, it will instruct its own experts to arrange details in London. —Reuter.

FRENCH HORSE FAVOURED FOR LINCOLNSHIRE

London, Mar. 12. —The French-bred Clarion III is favoured to win the one-mile Lincolnshire Handicap from the expected record field of 63 runners tomorrow.

Most English racing experts expect the classy French four-year-old to justify the favourites spot, which has been his since weights for the race were announced.

Clarion has always been favourite in pre-race betting lists. He is quoted at 100-6 against.

Racing at Lincoln sets off the 1948 British flat racing season.

There are more horses than ever in training in this country, the stakes are higher and race course commences despite shortages, have improved amenities for the "small man and his family."

A feature of the season will be French owners' attack on the richest prizes. For the purposes of racing, the franc has been set at 868 to the pound sterling. —Associated Press.

BOAT RACE TIMES

London, Mar. 12. —The Oxford University crew, by rowing their first full course trial over the Boat Race course of four and a quarter miles in 11 seconds faster than Cambridge University, have established themselves slight favourites for the annual intervarsity race, which will be held on the Thames, from Putney to Mortlake, on March 27. Despite the fact that some of the crew are suffering from heavy colds, Oxford completed 10 minutes 30 seconds, compared with the 10 minutes 50 seconds taken by Cambridge in their first full course trial. In similar conditions on Wednesday, Pulling together well, Oxford achieved this satisfactory result despite the fact that they had to steer against the tide, and later encountered a strong headwind.

It was a sound performance, which indicated that if the race was rowed tomorrow, the Dark Blues would win. —Reuter.

JOE LOUIS' FIXTURES

London, Mar. 12. —Joe Louis, the world heavyweight boxing champion, will take part in exhibition contests in Belgium and Sweden when he visits the continent after his one month's engagement in London. The first of these exhibitions is on March 21 in Brussels, and later appearances will be on April 2, in Gothenburg, and April 3, in Stockholm.

Four British boxers will have contests on the Brussels programme. They are Vince Hawkins, British middleweight champion, Ronnie Draper (bantamweight), Bert Horn (lightweight) and Gerry Smyth, of Belfast (lightweight). —Reuter.

AMATEUR GOLF

London, Mar. 12. —Twelve of the best amateur golfers from Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Belgium are to compete in the British amateur championship at Sandwich, Kent, on May 24 and 25.

They will be the guests of English amateur golfers earlier to reciprocate the "wonderful hospitality shown" during visits to the continent last year.

Three players from each country, including the national amateur champion, will arrive in England on May 17. They will play in several top class amateur events apart from the championship. —Associated Press.

CZECHS STAY AT HOME

Paris, Mar. 12. —Unable to get permission to leave Czechoslovakia, the Prague LTC Ice Hockey team will not be able to play their match with the Racing Club de Paris at the Palais des Sports here tomorrow night.

The London team, Harringay Greyhounds, will fill the breach. It was announced today by the Palais des Sports management. —Reuter.

JOCKEY DIES

Doncaster, Mar. 12. —R. Cane, 31-year-old British flat race and hurdle race jockey, who rode for the stables of North England owners, died in hospital here today as the result of injuries received when his mount Woolpack fell while contesting the Yorkshire Main Selling Handicap hurdle race here last Thursday. —Reuter.

Taft Supports Marshall Plan

Washington, Mar. 12. —The European recovery programme "is completely without economic justification but is justified by the world battle against Communism," Senator Robert Taft, the Republican aspirant for the Presidency, declared in the Senate today.

He urged the Senate to vote only $4,000,000,000 for the first 12 months of the programme rather than the $5,300,000,000 which the ERP bill provides.

He was speaking in support of his amendment to cut $1,300,000,000 from the bill.

Senator Taft termed the proposed programme "a serious interference with our own economic stability" and said it could "well do more harm than all the economic benefits conceivable for many years to come."

But the danger of the spread of Communism made it advisable to undertake the programme on a $4,000,000,000 basis.

"We may lose every cent we put up, but it seems to me there is a chance it will aid the battle against Communism," he said.

"The stakes are so large that I believe we should take that chance."

No War Measure
Senator Taft said he did not put much stock in the argument that the Marshall Plan would boost the morale of the European nations, "particularly if every shot in the arm cost $4,000,000,000."

He said he wanted to point out that "this is no war measure." "If we faced war, we would do much better to devote all our attention to military aid because the effect of this aid will hardly be felt in improved conditions for a number of months," he said.

He did not believe in the "war theory" although he had not the information available to the President.

Declaring that he did not understand the statements made by President Truman and the Secretary of State, Gen. George Marshall, he added: "I do not interpret them to mean that they have any reason to expect warlike attacks from Communist nations."

"I assume that if they had any such reasons, they would tell the country what those reasons are. I know of no indication of Russian intention to undertake military aggression beyond the sphere of influence which was originally assigned to her."

Logical Development
He termed the situation in Czechoslovakia tragic but said Russian influence had been predominant there since the end of the war.

"The Communists have consolidated their position but there has been no military advance and the situation is merely a logical development from the agreements made at Yalta and Potsdam."

"We could have occupied Czechoslovakia and Berlin, but we chose to withdraw because of the Yalta Agreement."

"The oppression of freedom in Eastern Europe is a direct result of the policy of our own Government. 'We must work on the assumption of continued peace if we wish to justify the present programme. It is a programme against Communist political aggression and not military aggression.' —Reuter."

LANGUAGE ALTERNATIVE
Special attention is brought to item (c) It is no longer necessary to offer European language or a classical or Oriental language as alternative to a science subject. Candidates who can offer Certificate Examination in English or French or German or Italian can obtain exemption from London Matriculation.

Those who have already passed the School Certificate examinations under the above conditions will be granted retrospective recognition. This ruling applies only to students seeking entrance to United Kingdom Universities. It does not apply to wide at one point, losing a good deal of the tide, and later encountered a strong headwind.

H.K.—MACAO AIR LINE

Cathay Pacific Airways' Flying Boat, VR-HDT, under charter to Macao Air Transport Co., Ltd., will make an inaugural flight from Hongkong to Macao and return on Sunday, March 14th. This flight will not be carrying any fare-paying passengers but will be in the nature of a survey flight, carrying various government officials and press. Macao Air Transport, as from Friday, March 19 will operate frequent flights to Macao every week-end, increasing to daily flights at a later date.

PALACE STRIKE THREATENED

London, Mar. 12. —Engineers' assistants responsible for the upkeep of Buckingham Palace threatened today to go on strike from Sunday because their request for wage increases has been refused by the Treasury.

The strike would also effect the Houses of Parliament and all Government offices.

The engineers' assistants are all employees of the Ministry of Works. The men who man the Palace and other lifelines employed by the Government will decide tomorrow whether to support the strike. —Reuter.

St Patrick's Eve Dinner Dance

It is learnt from the Hon. Secretary of St Patrick's Society of Hongkong that applications for the Dinner Dance on St Patrick's Eve, night have far exceeded expectations, and that consequently it may be necessary to indicate very shortly that time for making applications has been closed.

Members wishing to attend should therefore apply for invitations without further delay.

Critical Decision On Sudan

London, Mar. 12. —A critical decision on the future of the Sudan is due to be taken shortly by the Sudan Government, it is considered in diplomatic quarters in London.

The issue now facing the Governor-General, Sir Robert Howe, who has returned to London at the invitation of the British Government for talks at the Foreign Office, is whether to put into effect the draft ordinance on constitutional reforms in the Sudan, which was this week approved by the North Sudan Advisory Council in the face of disapproval of the Egyptian Government.

According to a usually well-informed source, it is, above all, this aspect of the Sudan problem which Mr. Howe will discuss with Sir Robert Howe when the latter calls on the Foreign Secretary either today or tomorrow.

If the Sudan Government decided to override the Egyptian objections to the Sudan constitutional proposals and if it received even tacit British support and encouragement, it must be expected that Anglo-Egyptian relations would be seriously further embittered and that the prospects of securing a revision of the 1936 alliance would be even more remote than they are today.

British policy on this issue is likely to be a matter on which two schools of thought will be apparent, even in official quarters here. The school favouring the prompt adoption of the new constitution in Khartoum will, no doubt, argue that it is dropped a new treaty with Egypt will not thereby be brought any nearer. —Reuter.
